Message from the Commanding Officer

Since becoming the commanding officer of Marine Corps Logistics Base Albany, I have witnessed our Marines, Sailors and civilian-Marines doing great things to place our base on the map.

There is no doubt that this installation has gained nationwide attention due to the efforts of our personnel, whether it is making the Landfill Gas-to-Energy project a reality or increasing their involvement with the community.

My goal remains to strengthen our relationship with our tenant organizations by providing outstanding customer service. This will enable the tenants to focus on supporting the warfighter.

However, we cannot be successful without also strengthening our bond with the local community; a bond that has proved crucial to implementing new projects here at MCLB Albany.

In 2010, Marine Corps Logistics Base Albany increased its contributions to a "greener" environment though the initiation of the Landfill Gas-to-Energy Project as well as the construction of the new energy-efficient Bachelors Enlisted Quarters, both of which are scheduled for completion in 2011.

We are surpassing all energy mandates and contributing to a cleaner Southwest Georgia. All of this would be impossible without the local community.

We continue to work with local universities and organizations to create a greener future. Reducing our dependence on foreign energy sources will also help the local economy.

In addition, Dougherty County has designated areas that surround this base as military zones, which enables businesses that create at least two jobs to receive tax credits.

We continue to meet challenges head-on along with our local community. We're all a team striving to achieve the same goals of a cleaner environment, economic prosperity and an area conducive for everyone.

TERRY V. WILLIAMS
Colonel, U.S. Marine Corps

MCLB ALBANY GOES GREEN

At Marine Corps Logistics Base Albany we are taking the fight to global climate change as well as environmental pollution. Numerous initiatives are currently in place, or in process, to help reduce our carbon footprint.

These projects include making the transition to an all "green" vehicle fleet by replacing gas vehicles with either electric or hybrid, as well as using photovoltaic technology to power the new enlisted barracks.

We realize we have a moral obligation not only as a base but as a Marine Corps to create and implement more efficient methods to expend energy and reduce waste.

A project is underway to power 20 percent of the installation using methane gas from a local landfill site. This trash-to-gas concept would not be possible without our partnership with Dougherty County, Ga., as well as Chevron Energy Solutions.

We are currently exploring ways of using biomass generators to power other portions of the installation as well as decreasing our dependence on foreign oil, while reducing green house gas emissions here.

In an effort to harness the latest science & technology, we have partnered with industry & academia to host applied research in renewable energy to include ground source heat pumps and fast pyrolysis to produce bio-based fuels.

We are also implementing energy-efficient heaters and chillers in the new enlisted barracks that are not only more effective than their waste producing counterparts, but also require less energy.

The goal is not only to become the "greenest" base in the Marine Corps, but also within the Department of the Navy and, ultimately, the Department of Defense. This is part of a Department of the Navy initiative to become the leader in environmental change.
